Tim Shipman

Political Editor, The Spectator

Tim Shipman is Political Editor of The Spectator magazine, a post he took up in June of this year. Previously he spent 11 years as the Chief Political Commentator and also Political Editor at the Sunday Times,

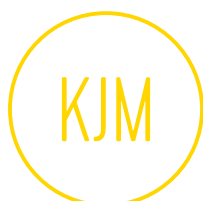

His quartet of books on the turmoil in British politics in the decade after the Brexit referendum have sold more than 150,000 copies and are widely regarded as the definitive insider account of the most turbulent time in domestic politics since the Second World War.

An engaging, informed and amusing speaker, Tim is widely acknowledged to have the best contacts in the business and uses them to help lift the veil on what is really going on and who is doing what to who in Westminster and beyond.

Tim is one of the most decorated political journalist of the last few years, garnering fourteen nominations for major awards, including ten in seven years at the British Press Awards, the newspaper industry's Oscars. He has won a unique double, being named both political reporter and political commentator of the year.

Tim has been reporting from Westminster since 2001, covering seven general elections, three referendums, two wars and countless leadership contests. He has also reported on four US elections and conducted one of just two British print interviews with Donald Trump, giving him a unique perspective on the links between British and American politics.

Tim is a regular on the Today programme and the co-presenter of Times Radio's PMQs Unpacked show. He is an experienced broadcaster on the BBC and Sky News and has made appearances on Have I Got News For You and The News Quiz.

“Thank you for speaking at the ABI's Annual Dinner. You provided an incisive yet entertaining look at the current political landscape, and I know that ABI attendees really appreciated your remarks. (I am not sure about the politicians in the room!)”

Association of British Insurers

“Thank you to Tim for joining us. A very interesting and well received speech which was thoroughly enjoyed by our guests.”

“There are those sessions at conferences which have something special - and if I knew the precise recipe for these and how to bottle it, I would!

Your session had something special and was the talk of the conference.

You covered a subject key to our future - and of course whilst we all remain optimistic, I think from your session we emerged a little wiser and with a greater urgency to prepare for what might emerge from the Year of Elections.”
